Northern Ireland: as Westminster prepares another sell-out formula, we say...

NO COMPROMISE NO POWER SHARING NO SURRENDER!

WHEN THE ANGLO-IRISH AGREEMENT was instituted in 1986, we said that, not only did it amount to a shameful betrayal of the loyal people of Ulster, it would also prove to be a total failure — in that it would accomplish nothing whatever in abating the wave of terrorism engulfing Northern Ireland. It gives us no pleasure to affirm now that we have been proved right.

But not only do we know that the Agreement has been a flop, there are signs that its architects in Westminster know that also. Now the signs are that they peddling yet one more new 'peace' formula for Northern Ireland that, in effect, amounts to one more sell-out formula — in that it persists in the idea that violence and terror will decrease if Irish Republicans are given more say in Ulster's affairs. The new formula appears to be designed to take the form of some 'power-sharing' committee that will administer the province — basically no different from 'power-sharing' schemes that have been designed before. What is alarming is that some Unionist leaders have announced themselves to be in favour of looking at the scheme, and even taking part in it. This should give true loyalists in Northern Ireland great cause for concern.

For we believe that such a committee, like all previous formulae put forward by Westminster, is nothing more than a 'con' — designed to increase the interference of the Irish Republic and its allies north of the border in the affairs of Ulster. It also shows that Westminster has learned precisely nothing from the experience of the past 20 years.

We urge all loyal Ulster people, and all their friends outside the province, to have no truck with this latest scheme. It simply amounts to the same policy of betrayal and sell out — masquerading under new names and new procedures. It amounts to just another blueprint for surrender — whereas the correct policy for Northern Ireland should be: No surrender!

The latest moves, like all similar moves in the past, are based on a tragic delusion, the very delusion that has formed the basis of government policy in Northern Ireland for the past two decades. The delusion is that what is needed to take the heat out of the conflict, and isolate the bombers and gunmen, is a gradual drawing together of the two communities in the province by means of a compromise policy, which attempts to reconcile the desire of loyalists to remain British and the desire of republicans to join a United Ireland.

TOM KING
Emissary in Ulster for a treasonable government. All loyal Ulster people should shun his schemes like the plague

IRRECONCILABLE

But the reality is of course that these two asprirations are utterly and permanently irreconcilable. Loyalists and republicans want two different things, indeed completely opposite things. There is not the slightest common ground between them — as there cannot be between two sets of people whose loyalties are to two different, and mutually opposed and hostile, national entities.

What our politicians cannot seem capable of grasping is that there is no 'middle-way' peace formula for Northern Ireland; one side must win, and the other must lose. Northern Ireland must stay British — in which case the Irish Republic has no right to play any role in its affairs — or it must become part of the Republic, in which case the bombers and the gunmen will have won: all their killing and maiming in Northern Ireland will have been proved to them worthwhile. These are the two stark alternatives.

It should be our fundamental instinct, as British people, to wish that Northern Ireland stay British, and to support the people of Northern Ireland who share that wish — which is the case with the majority.

From this it follows that our aim in Northern Ireland should first and foremost be victory — victory for the British side, victory for British forces, victory over Britain's enemies.

Victory, as US General Douglas MacArthur once said, is something for which there is no substitute. The General was then speaking of the Korean War, but nowhere are his words more apposite than in the case of the conflict in Northern Ireland.

LEGACY OF FAILURE

For the past 20 years, successive British governments have been ignoring this basic truth, and have been pursuing phantoms in the way of substitutes for victory. Their policy has been one gigantic failure. They have subordinated the priority of victory to the priority of 'peace'. But in fact they have not achieved peace, only a continuation of the conflict.

It is time now for a different policy: a policy in which victory becomes the uppermost aim: victory for the loyalist cause, the British cause, victory over the IRA and over republicanism.

And if that policy is adopted it will also provide the best possibility for peace.

UNHOLY ALLIANCE
Mrs. Thatcher and Mr. Haughey, pictured at their meeting in 1980. Their handshake is symbolic of a common purpose: to destroy British Ulster. Both have worked, ever since, in close partnership to that end

The forces of the British Crown, together with the majority of people in Northern Ireland, are more than capable of winning the war against the men of terror. They have the manpower. They have the resources. They have the assurance of a just cause. They could win in a short time if they acted within the framework of a policy whose aim was victory.

They are only failing to win the war against terror because they are hampered by a policy whose aim is not victory. That is why the terror continues, and why innocent people are still getting killed.

THE WAY TO VICTORY

The way to victory — and thereby ultimately to peace — in Northern Ireland requires two basic strategies: the military and the political.

The military strategy must be to destroy the forces of terror and destroy them utterly. This means conducting operations against terrorists as if we were at war with them — which we are — and fighting according to the rules of war, seeking out the terrorists and eliminating them where we find them, with no holds barred.

On the political level, the strategy must be to offer no crum of comfort to the terrorists in the way of the slightest concession to them that republicans have any right to a say in the affairs of Ulster, whether these republicans are those of the Irish government south of the border or members of that government's fifth column in Ulster itself: the men of the SDLP, the Sinn Feiners and others.

Parallel with this, there must be a declaration of resolve — made by British government itself — that Northern Ireland will remain British for all time — come what may, and the maximum force of the British State will, if necessary, be used to ensure that policy.

This will not end the conflict — let us not deceive ourselves.

But it will signify the beginning of the end of the conflict, because the one thing that gives the IRA and its allies the will to carry on — the belief that Britain wants out of Ulster — will have been removed. It will also accomplish a

BRITAIN AND ULSTER: TIME FOR SOLIDARITY

BRITAIN is today threatened by an alien and international conspiracy, which seeks to destroy her nationhood. By far the most evil aspect of this conspiracy is the fact that the British government is complying willingly with its aims.

Nowhere are all the elements of the conspiracy more obvious than in Ulster. For some 20 years, the loyal British majority in the province has been under murderous attack by the republican gangsters of the IRA — with more than a nod and a wink from the government of Eire, a foreign state which lays claim to this piece of British territory in a part of its constitution.

This terror campaign is intended to bring about the surrender of Ulster and its people, and their forcible incorporation into the Irish Republic.

Of course, the tough and courageous loyal Ulster folk are made of much sterner stuff than to submit to this terror and surrender their heritage.

But the same cannot be said of the government at Westminster, which right from the beginning of the present troubles has never made a firm declaration of its resolve that Ulster will forever remain British, let alone acted in such a way as to guarantee that this would be so. In fact, with some thousands of Britons in the province having been savagely done to death over the past two decades, one government after another has pussyfooted, appeased and fallen over itself to negotiate with those who want to take Ulster out of the Kingdom.

The foulest betrayal to date is that by Mrs. Margaret Thatcher, who made a deal with the Prime Minister of Eire, giving the Dublin government a 'right' of interference in the internal affairs of Ulster — a 'right' which is not hers to give, but which she conceded without the slightest attempt to obtain consent for her action from the loyal people of Ulster.

The disgust and loathing of Ulster loyalists against Britain's present rulers are feelings which we recognise as natural and right. For they are the same as the feelings experienced by Britons everywhere else as they become conscious of the same betrayals to the same alien forces.

For Ulster people should understand that they are not the only victims of betrayal. If Britain's politicians do not give a damn for them, nor do they care a damn for their fellow countrymen and -women on the mainland. To take the most dramatic example, by the same kind of stealthy treachery as is being used to destroy British Ulster, the traitors of Westminster have imposed an alien presence in mainland Britain in the form of millions of Afro-Asian immigrants, who have been allowed to set up ghettos in most of Britain's major cities — again with no attempt by the politicians to obtain the consent of the people.

Only British Nationalists work for the salvation of the British Nation, and we are alone on the mainland in working to create the kind of regenerated Britain in which all of us can have a secure future.

Mainland nationalists and Ulster loyalists are in fact working for the same things. It is time for solidarity and close co-operation between us. For in the end we cannot do without each other.

BEHIND MRS. THATCHER'S BOGUS 'MORALITY' CRUSADE...

Tories coddle the queers

ONE OF Mrs. Thatcher's most ludicrous, as well as dishonest, public postures is that of a defender of 'traditional values'. Nothing could give the lie to this absurd nonsense more clearly than the way in which her Tory government has acted to coddle, cosset and protect homosexuality.

Only now is the truth starting to come out about how the government's advertising campaign against the AIDS plague deliberately distorted the truth so as to avoid offending the queers, and to spare them the public anger which they would rightly have incurred had the authorities told the true facts about the origin of the disease. AIDS — described by one doctor as ''the most lethal virus in history'' — was brought about by the uncontrolled practice by homosexuals and their perversions. Now they have spread the disease far and wide throughout Britain and the West, having been the primary agents in importing it from Africa, where it arose in the first place.

Above all, the government campaign sought to pretend that AIDS is a problem affecting the whole population, whereas, in the West at least, it is overwhelmingly a disease of queers — even though there are means whereby it can be communicated to normal people. Behind this lie were Lord Whitelaw, appointed Chairman to the Cabinet Committee on AIDS (with the approval, we assume, of Mrs. Thatcher) and Cabinet Secretary Sir Robert Armstrong. Both dyed-in-the-wool Tory bigwig Whitelaw and pillar of the establishment Armstrong were determined that the anti-AIDS campaign should not take the form of a moral crusade against the homos and their perverted behaviour.

Armstrong took the view that public money could not be used to finance an attack upon homosexuality — although it could be quite safely used against drug-users who had caught the disease from infected needles. In other words, in the eyes of Mrs. Thatcher's government, homosexuality is no longer to be recognised as a wrong or immoral form of behaviour. Nor might any steps be officially taken against it by the authorities, even to the extent of criticising or expressing disapproval of it.

In short, in Tory eyes queers cannot be taken at any other than their own valuation — as the equals of heterosexuals, with their full 'rights', for which they have been loudly clamouring for years, officially conceded.

PUBLIC FUNDS LAVISHED ON POOFTERS

Most scandalously of all, the government, which is forever cutting back on public money available to fund the normal functions of the health service, allowed a large sum of health service cash to be given to a homo organisation called the 'Terrence Higgins Trust'. This purports to be a charitable foundation set up to combat AIDS, but in fact, behind this cover, senior civil servants believe its main aim is to make propaganda for the queer fraternity and their life-style!

Moreover, senior medical experts take the view that this front for the homo lobby is actively assisting the spread of AIDS by blocking screening for the disease. It appears that homo pressure groups, such as the Trust and its allies, are preventing standard medical procedures being followed. Such is the cover-up to protect the queers that government policy has allowed.

In fact, standing revealed here is the reality of Toryism — behind Mrs. Thatcher's empty hot air about a 'moral crusade'. Far from asserting themselves manfully in any sort of crusade, 'moral' or otherwise, against the enemies of the British Nation, the contemporary Tories are entirely preoccupied with appeasing and adapting themselves to the demands of the best organised, most powerful and most loud-mouthed interest groups and lobbies with an axe to grind, by the most expedient methods and for the greatest pay-off in terms of votes at election times.

Most of such interest groups today are profoundly destructive of Britain's national welfare. They include, for example, the ethnic and multi-racialist lobbies, the left-dominated media and, not least, the queer lobby, which now infests just about every established national institution.

NOISY, AGGRESSIVE AND MILITANT
'Gay' march through London's centre. The banner shows how far some participants have come!

NEST OF QUEERS

This is true of the Tory Party itself, which is just as full of homos as are the SLD and Labour Parties — albeit that it is Labour who put their party forward as the queers' flagship. It should not be forgotten that the Tories too have an official 'Gay Rights' section, against which Mrs. Thatcher has never been known to take any steps.

Many people will also remember disgraced Tory MP for Billericay, Harvey Proctor, who paid for the services of male prostitutes to whom he dished out spankings as part of the fun. In a recent TV interview Proctor indicated that parliament is worm-eaten with homos, and that this is a thoroughly cross-bench phenomenon.

Indeed, it might be said that the whole modern-day Tory philosophy might have been calculated to create conditions in which queers, and other aggressive minorities, could thrive.

Mrs. Thatcher and her colleagues have, after all, spent the last nine years preaching that all that matters is satisfying private material greed. To this end, they say, every individual must have the right to ''do his own thing'' free of any restraint or any sense of a higher national purpose to be actively promoted or enforced by authoritative leadership from those in government.

No wonder the queer mafia in Britain is now having such a field day!

The queers' real launchpad was the 'permissive society' of the 1960s, when, among other developments, homosexuality was legalised. Since then the homos have felt free to corrupt the youth of Britain into their sickening cult, and organise themselves into a force which no 'liberal-democratic' government, of whatever party stripe, is capable of resisting — in order to demand, and get, their so-called 'rights'.

Decent society has to a large extent fallen to pieces under the impact of moral permissiveness, which, originally promoted under Labour in the 1960s, now fits so perfectly with the Toryism of the 1980s. The queers, whom Mrs. Thatcher has not the slightest real will to tackle, are among those who benefit most from this.

These people will be among the first to oppose, tooth and nail, the real moral crusade which Britain undoubtedly needs, and which only nationalists will undertake. A decent public moral climate — representing the feelings and attitudes natural to the majority of the British people — can only come from the restoration of a vigorous and purposeful national community, based on common blood and race, and centred on wholesome relations between the sexes, the defence of the family, and the restoration of the values of true manhood and true womanhood. Nothing less will suffice.

GOVERNMENT ALLOWS B.B.C. TO GET AWAY WITH PROMOTING OBSCENE WEMBLEY 'POP' CONCERT ON BEHALF OF AFRICAN COMMUNIST GANGSTER NELSON MANDELA

THE SCREENING by the BBC, over no less than TEN HOURS of prime television viewing time on a Saturday last month, of a 'pop' concert at London's Wembley Stadium, intended to glorify black South African communist gangster Nelson Mandela, was nothing less than an obscenity. It was, however, an obscenity which Mrs. Thatcher and her Tory government obviously meant to allow the publicly funded broadcasting establishment to get away with.

The disgraceful exhibition was allowed to go ahead despite the obvious awareness, on the part of both the BBC authorities and programme-planners and the government, of the true facts about Mandela himself.

SONG FOR A TERRORIST

This self-confessed terrorist has been quite rightly held in jail for the better part of 25 years by the South African government for his part in a conspiracy, back in 1963, to bring about a bloody, Soviet-backed race war in South Africa. At no time has Mandela ever denied his part in this communist-inspired scheme for revolution and mass murder; indeed, he was imprisoned following a scrupulously fair trial in which he had actually pleaded guilty to plotting to cause explosions.

TERRORIST LEADER

By that time, Mandela was the leader of the terrorist wing of the African National Congress (ANC), a black organisation controlled by the South African Communist Party. He had had a very long previous record of association with the sadistic mayhem unleashed by the ANC over many years prior to his trial and imprisonment — mayhem principally against Whites.

As far back as 1952, during a 'defiance' campaign against the South African government whipped up by ANC agitators, a white nun, Sister Mary Quinlan, was waylaid, whilst visiting the African sick in a black township, by a mob which hacked her to death, howling: ''Kill the white rubbish!'' Black witnesses later described how Sister Quinlan's body was cut to pieces and passed out to members of the mob to be eaten. All that police found afterwards were a pool of blood, lumps of flesh and Sister Quinlan's burnt-out car.

Mandela never repudiated the kind

MULTI-RACIAL MADNESS
This is Rosie Pearson, daughter of Lord and Lady Cowdray, pictured with her Rastafarian husband Palma Taylor. The very fact that this priviliged young lady chose to marry outside her race, and thereby desert her responsibilites to her family and social station, is an indication of the lack of a firm upbringing and the failure of her parents to instil into her the desired loyalties and values

OUR DEGENERATE ARISTOCRACY

THE FEMALE shown here is a viscount's daughter, Rosie Pearson by name. She is seen in the company of — believe it or not — her new husband. He is Rastafarian reggae musician Palma Taylor, whose hat, according to a news report, conceals 18-inch-long dreadlocks.

Rosie is the multi-millionairess daughter of Lord and Lady Cowdray, who own an 18,000-acre estate in Sussex. She is an Oxford-educated former journalist and a close friend of the Duchess of York.

She had dragged her new hubby before the news cameras at Gatwick Airport in order to declare to the world as she hugged him in public: "We are madly in love."

The two had been honeymooning in Jamaica, and were on their way to their terrace home in Notting Hill for a celebration reggae-and-drinks party. It is not clear from reports whether this was going to be of the 'all-night' variety to which millions of ordinary Londoners are nowadays regularly exposed from dusk till dawn.

It is rumoured that Rosie had a blazing row with her parents over her choice of a husband, and both Lord and Lady Cowdray were conspicuously absent from their daughter's wedding celebrations in the West Indies.

This may not be altogether without interest in view of the origins of a large part of the £1,000-million Cowdray fortune. The Cowdray interests include the cosmopolitan Lazard international bank. Then in addition there are the Cowdray investments in The Financial Times, The Economist and Penguin Books.

Every one of these publications and publishing concerns has played a major role in setting the sick, 'liberal' tone of modern Britain. Every one of them, in its own way, has helped to push ideas and values designed to grind down the racial, national and moral backbone of the British people. Every one of them is cosmopolitan, internationalist and multi-racialist.

The Cowdray family has been growing fat and rich promoting all kinds of liberalistic ideas, including race mixing. Can it be that, now that the natural consequences of all this has come home to them in a very personal way, they do not like it?

Whatever the case may be, this whole story shows, as so many others have, how deeply rotten Britain's ruling class has become. It is now time to create a new order of national leadership to replace this effete and exhausted clique.

BRITISH NATIONALISM AND THE COMING EPOCH

Book review by RONALD RICKCORD

JOHN TYNDALL'S new book, The Eleventh Hour, is a blockbuster. It is a book I found difficult to put down once I started reading it, and I am sure others will find the same. It is also a book that will become essential reading for all nationalists: indeed, it deserves to be read by all Britons who have a genuine interest and concern for the future of our country and the well-being of the British Race. Personally, I would like to see the book made compulsory reading for all British — and I mean BRITISH — politicians and wielders of public opinion who, oblivious to the fate they are heaping upon us and our posterity, are content to preside over the destruction of our heritage, our culture and our race, whilst they play at politics and pursue their own puny careers.

The Eleventh Hour is undoubtedly a masterpiece. It encompasses the entire spectrum of political and social problems that beset Britain today. But the book is much more than simply a catalogue of the ills which threaten contemporary Britain and the remedies for combatting them. It commences with an autobiographical account of Mr. Tyndall's background and upbringing, and the circumstances which caused him, at an early age, to take an active interest in political matters, and ultimately led him to British Nationalism.

MASTERLY DIAGNOSIS

The book continues with a masterly diagnosis of the criminal policies which led to Britain's demise as a world power, and gives a penetrating assessment of the disastrous effects that the policies of successive governments have had on our national fortunes. It also gives us a fascinating history of British Nationalism, as well as an authoritative account of many of the events in which Mr. Tyndall has been personally involved, particularly the rise and fall of the National Front.

The book deals with many other topical and controversial subjects — defence, Ulster, the role of the media, the Jews, the racial problem — to name just a few; but unfortunately space does not permit me to discuss here the many and diverse subjects with which Mr. Tyndall deals so authoritatively and exhaustively.

Finally, and most importantly, Mr. Tyndall concerns himself with the future of Britain and the British Race. Indeed, The Eleventh Hour is essentially a blueprint for our national and racial resurgence. It is therefore a book which should be of particular interest to young people embarking on their careers, especially those who are sympathetic to British Nationalism and are interested in learning more about our ideals and beliefs.

HEROIC

Those who are fortunate enough to have heard Mr. Tyndall speaking at nationalist meetings and rallies will not need to be reminded what an inspiring speaker he is. The Eleventh Hour proves that he is no less inspiring as a writer. The book is replete with many purple passages. Referring to the philosophy of British Nationalism he writes:-

> "Our creed is one of heroism, and the coming epoch calls for the return of the heroic virtues. Not for us the cosy tranquillity of the political soft option; for us only the long march through the cold night that must proceed the glorious dawn."

It would be dishonest of me to pretend that I agree entirely with everything that Mr. Tyndall writes in a book of such length (over 600 pages!) and covering so many subjects. I am not entirely convinced that his plan for reforming the electoral system is either practicable or would significantly improve the lot of the British people; but since it has long been my belief that 'democracy' has been one of the factors responsible for our national decline perhaps I am biased! Nevertheless, despite this and similar minor differences, I can truthfully say that I find myself in agreement with at least 99 per-cent of the book's contents, which, considering its enormous coverage, is quite remarkable — especially in view of the fact that I, no less than Mr. Tyndall, hold strong political opinions.

THE ELEVENTH HOUR* by John Tyndall. 609pp. Hardback £17.20; Paperback £11.60 (both inc. p&p). Available from: BNP Book Service, PO Box 446, London SE23 2LS.

OUTSTANDING TESTAMENT

All in all, The Eleventh Hour is a magnificent achievement and of absorbing interest. Monumental both in size and scope, the book will, I predict, become the standard work of reference on British Nationalism for many years to come. In addition, it is indisputedly the best and most outstanding political testament written by any British patriot in recent times.

John Tyndall deserves our congratulations and thanks for producing this stupendous work. We can all show him our appreciation by buying it, not just for ourselves, but also as presents for our relatives and friends. This will help to give the book the publicity it deserves, which is particularly important because, good as it undoubtedly is, it is hardly likely to find its way into the bookshops or onto the library shelves for some time to come.

Nevertheless, that day will come — of that I am sure. And when it does, The Eleventh Hour will take its rightful place on bookshelves up and down the country, and indeed throughout the world, as one of the great political tracts of our times. In years to come, it will be much sought after, and copies of the first edition will be collector's pieces. So get yours now!

DOUBLE STANDARD

Why no public outrage over racial attacks on WHITES?

THE GREAT public song and dance over alleged 'racial attacks' by Whites against Blacks and Asians, a song and dance orchestrated by members of the government and opposition parties and the mass media, shows no sign of letting up. But in the meantime neither politicans nor media have anything to say about the increasing numbers of attacks occurring in the jungle of Britain's towns and cities in which Whites are the victims?

In one such attack, reports of which were relegated to the inside pages of a few newspapers, a woman was tortured for four hours in what was stated by police to be a racially motivated attack, at her home in Mill Hill (NW London), by a black intruder. She was beaten by her assailant, who forced her to the ground and kicked her, breaking her leg, when she tried to escape into the street.

The man then repeatedly kicked her broken thigh; slapped her and burned her face and hair with a cigarette lighter; forced her to walk and pressed her hand onto a red-hot cooker hob; and finally ripped the cord of her telephone from the wall and attempted to strangle her with it, before leaving with her watch and jewellery and £28 from her purse.

Throughout this sickening attack, the thug called the woman "white bitch" and "white slag".

A police spokesman said: "The motive for the attack seems to have been that she was white and he had some problem about his own colour. It was vicious and calculated. There was no indication that he was drunk or on drugs. The woman was not sexually assaulted."

NEED FOR PUBLIC OUTRAGE

If such subhuman evil is to be fought effectively, it is necessary and right that an appropriate mood of public outrage should be aroused, not just against the criminals but — much more to the point — against those in positions of authority who have created the kind of conditions in which such things can occur. But of course the government, and those it has appointed to positions of authority, are concentrating all their efforts on trying to cover up the appalling consequences that have arisen from their 'multi-racial' experiment, whilst simultaneously attempting to silence all opposition to it. No matter how disastrous the effects on Britain, they are determined to continue with their multi-racialist policies. To this end, they spare no efforts to stifle any sense of outrage on the part of the British people against what is being done.

In this they are aided and abetted by the media. One way in which the media collaborate is by falsifying the picture of conditions in multi-racial Britain. As an example, they constantly portray British people attacking, insulting and ill-treating Blacks and Asians, while completely ignoring the many cases of racial attacks that occur in reverse, and in which Whites are the people on the receiving end.

Between them, the politicians and media have conspired to create a climate in which, to quote journalist Paul Johnson, writing in The Spectator, "the subject of race is another vast area where censorship, often backed by law, operates at a number of levels. Indeed, I think it can truthfully be said that no newspaper now dares to publish articles which discuss Britain's race problems frankly."

A colleague of Johnson's, Peregrine Worsthorne, editor of the Sunday Telegraph, goes further than this, saying that, from the first, the media "has allowed itself to become part of the conspiracy (to turn Britain into a multi-racial society), playing down the facts so as not to arouse too much public opposition."

In addition, weak and submissive attitudes have deliberately been encouraged among ordinary British people in the face of one outrage after another. Just recently, a white man, Mr. Ralph Berry, who was on a visit home from South Africa, was involved in an argument with three black youths in Leytonstone (NE London), who had forced his elderly parents' car into the side of the road after cutting in front of it in their own vehicle. The trio had leapt from their car and started to menace the old couple.

Their son, who had been driving behind, left his own car to help his parents. He was beaten by the Blacks, who then threw him in front of an articulated lorry, which killed him.

If, by any chance, a Black were to have been killed in this way by Whites, there cannot be the slightest doubt that the whole affair would be trumpeted across the headlines as some sort of 'racist killing', with the accompaniment of sermons about the evils of white 'racism'. But as, in this case, the victim was white, there was no suggestion of any racial motivation, nor anything like the appropriate outrage on the part of the media.

Indeed, the London Evening Standard headlined its report: "Mother prays for her son's killers." The dead man's mother is described as feeling no bitterness against the thugs responsible for the loss of her son. Incredibly, she is quoted as saying: "I only want to pray for their souls. I cannot feel any bitterness about the boys who did it. I am too sad." To crown this weak and sickly effusion, Mrs. Berry was further quoted as saying: "It's ironic that black boys did it. He loved them, and was so opposed to what was happening in South Africa."

This whole report could have been deliberately contrived to portray our white people in this country as the most pitiful patsies in creation. It is by a combination of lies and the propagation of such sickly attitudes that the present rulers of Britain, in politics and the media, hope to paralyse the will of the British people to combat the diabolical evils of our present society, of which these two quoted cases are merely two among thousands of examples.

It is only from a stern sense of righteousness and honour, and a capacity for outrage, that we will muster the forces necessary to defeat these evils and the people responsible for them.

YOUR LETTERS

Sir, — I read in the newspaper the other day that Mrs. Thatcher, angry at the latest IRA outrage in which a bomb was placed on a bus carrying schoolchildren, attacked Irish premier Charles Haughey for not doing enough to counter terrorism. If ever there was a case of the pot calling the kettle black this was it! Mrs. Thatcher, for the entire duration of her own premiership, has adopted a vacillating and pussyfooting approach to terrorism in Northern Ireland, hamstringing the security forces in their task of fighting it, compromising over the status of Northern Ireland as a part of the United Kingdom and doing everything possible to encourage the men of terror by demonstrating to them that their campaign of violence and intimidation was paying off, in the way of leading the British government to lose its nerve and its will to pay what Kipling called "the price of sovereignty."

Just whom does the 'Iron Lady' think she is kidding?

Sir, — I am writing in order to express my outrage at the attack on civil liberties by those who have brought about the dismissals from their employment of Malcolm Skeggs and Richard Edmonds, and are now seeking the further dismissal of Mr. Skeggs from his new job — and all on account of these men's political activities and loyalties. While I am not a supporter of the BNP (in fact I am a member of the National Front) I cannot but sympathise with these two men.

I note that the campaign against Malcolm Skeggs has largely been orchestrated by the Militant Tendency. They printed a prominent attack on him in issue no. 898 (27th May 1988) of their paper. It is important to know exactly who the enemies of justice are.

SPREADING THE MESSAGE

IN RECENT WEEKS, East Anglia activists of the British National Party, helped by extras from London, have adopted a strategy of journeying regularly to new and virgin areas in order to spread the party's message. Flying visits have been made to Liss, Cambridge, Ely and Chelmsford for the purpose of leafletting and paper sales. In this way, BNP publicity material has been introduced to areas where the party has previously been scarcely heard of.

Party organisers in other regions of the country would do well to emulate this practice. Large areas of Britain still lie fallow where nationalist activity is concerned, while some party units continue to restrict their activities to old hunting grounds in the inner parts of the bigger cities, sometimes encountering a law of diminishing returns due to the fact that these areas have been thoroughly saturated with nationalist propaganda over 20 years.

One requirement of this new strategy is of course that units are mobile. Two or three cars are needed, or better still a motor van. The latter is a worthwhile target for all units that lack wheels. When this asset has been acquired, enormous new possibilities are opened up in the way of expanding the range of the party's message. A lead has been given in East Anglia — let others follow it!

"When it comes to television, there is, according to Sir William Rees-Mogg, former Vice-Chairman of the BBC's Board of Governors and now Chairman of the Broadcasting Standards Council, a collective view in the Corporation that the 'oppressed minorities' — which include all women, all black people and all homosexuals — are always right.

"The drama department, which believes that the independence of broadcasters means that they are free to run their own propaganda line, is where the minorities idea is at its strongest..."

SUNDAY TELEGRAPH (5th JUne)

Successful Sunday Outing

LOUGHTON BRANCH of the British National Party held a highly successful outing at Clacton on Sunday, June 26th. The party went to the Essex resort by coach. On arriving there, it split up into groups, with some exploring the arcades, some taking a bracing walk and some, headed by Branch Organiser Mark Wilson, going leafletting. The latter distributed 1,200 items of BNP literature in a very short time.

It was arranged for all to meet together again in the town later, where a picnic lunch was held on the beach. Following the lunch, a game of football was organised in which the young and the not quite so young contested a keenly fought match. Then there was just time to get back to the beach, where the branch's speedboat was coaxed into action and some took a trip, while others went for a swim.

Afterwards, there was a hearty vote of thanks to Mark Wilson and Gary Shatford for organising the outing and to Sue Shatford and Nicole Barker for laying on the picnic lunch, which all thoroughly enjoyed.

NO SURRENDER!

further thing: it will unify the now divided ranks of the loyalist community in Ulster' because it will provide that community with a policy on which all its members can agree and work together.

WHAT IS FIRST NEEDED

Will this policy of victory — as opposed to the failed policy of appeasement, compromise and surrender — be adopted? No, it will not — as long as the powers that be in Westminster remain as they are.

The policy will only be adopted when British Nationalism becomes the prevailing power in mainland Britain. This will not happen tomorrow. But it can happen if all the potential forces of British Nationalism, on the mainland and in Ulster, are mobilised in the years ahead so as to create an irresistable new political force — for the salvation of Britain and Northern Ireland and the resurgence, the world over, of the British Race.

This is the purpose of our movement. Loyalists in Ulster, with patriots on the mainland, have a common interest in the growth, and the eventual victory, of that movement. They must fight together — for together they can win!

MANDELA CONCERT

of violent agitation that led to such atrocities. On the contrary, he was afterwards proclaiming to his ANC followers, in a document entitled How to be a Good Communist, that white rule must be smashed and the enemies of communism "completely crushed and wiped from the face of the earth before a communist world can be realised." He declared that "we Communist Party members are the most advanced revolutionaries in modern history."

Mandela himself has not changed his tune in any way. He remains as fanatical a terrorist as he has ever been.

One word from him would have been sufficient, at any time, to stop the burnings to death, by means of the so-called rubber-tyre 'necklace', of the mainly African opponents of the ANC in the black townships. But this Mandela refuses to give. In fact, his wife Winnie has recently proclaimed: "He will never renounce violence." And, presumably speaking with his authority, she has declared to the ANC rank and file: "Together, hand in hand, with our boxes of matches and our necklaces, we shall liberate this country."

HUMAN GARBAGE ON STAGE

The degrading public exhibition at Wembley featured some of the most degenerate human garbage from the world of 'pop' and show business, much of whose regular output is devoted to promoting such causes as drugs, multi-racialism, homosexuality and left-wing politics. As well as blaring out the usual grotesque jungle rhythms, which they try to pass off as a form of 'music', many of the 'pop' stars saw fit to denounce White South Africa in front of the audience and TV cameras, whilst mouthing the praises of terrorist Mandela.

A number of 'right-wing' Tory MPs took exception to this, since the BBC had given undertakings in advance that political statements from the 'pop-star' rabble would not be televised. In fact, the whole show had been organised by the rabidly left-wing and anti-white 'Anti-Apartheid' Movement, as the BBC's programme planners well knew, and there was never any chance of it being anything but one long propaganda plug for the sort of 'black power' marxist terrorism represented by their hero Mandela.

This was, after all, the whole intention of the organisers! The BBC's 'undertakings' in advance were little better than cynical humbug.

It is nothing new for the BBC to give free publicity to leftist and anti-white causes. But what may surprise some people was Mrs. Thatcher's virtual endorsement of the BBC's broadcast. In reply to the complaints of her own right-wing backbenchers in parliament, it was stated that she was fully in agreement with Nelson Mandela's release from prison and proposed to take no action against the BBC.

British people may no longer be surprised at the sight of 'loony left' councils and their like glorifying Nelson Mandela by naming streets, housing estates, parks and public buildings after him. For reds, after all, he and the ANC represent the very same pattern for revolution aimed at destroying our civilisation that they wish to unleash in Britain.

But now it seems that Mrs. Thatcher and the Tory government endorse Mandela too! This is indeed a development on which the people of this country would do well to ponder.
